Neal Hutchko

"The Ubiquitous"

Friday December 14, 2007 6:00 – 8:30pm

Using acrylic, India ink, pencil and bleach on canvas, he has evolved a unique process in the creation of his works: taking several c.d.'s by the same musical artist/band/group, turning up the volume, he paints what he hears. The results express emotion, ideas and subliminal concepts, derived from the lyrics, the musical notes themselves or the overarching theme that exists throughout the musical collection.

The range of sounds employed in his creative process is as wide as the very genre of music itself, encompassing everything from classical music to modern rock. He encompasses as many artistic styles as needed for his works.

Neal Hutchko is an American artist living in downtown Washington D.C. His work is held in private and non-profit collections in the USA and Japan.
